PRENTICE WORK AT A BARBER'S.

A Vineland exchange says: A farmer's son took the place of one of our barber's apprentices while the latter was on his vacation recently, and as he was green in the business the head barber only allowed him to rub customers' heads and comb hair, besides brushing hats and clothes occasionally.

A customer with a wig was turned over to the young man to put the finishing touches on, and not knowing that the gentleman in the chair wore a wig the greenhorn began to pour on the oil and rub vigorously,

The irate customer felt his wig moving over his pale at the rate of forty knots an bour, got disgusted, and left the shop. The apprentice decided that as a barber he was not a success, and has returned to his former avocation-that of raising and shipping
